archaeon, Sulfolobus solfataricus. The structural and functional properties of the hyperthermophilic archaeal pilus subunit from the archaeon Sulfolobus solfataricus P2 (pss protein) have been studied by replacing a total of 6 amino acid residues (Asp(214), Asp(215), Glu(216), Asp(214, 216) and Asp(214, 216)) with alanine. The substitution of residues in the catalytic domain caused a significant reduction in the pilus density on the cell surface and a reduction in the specific activity of the pilus. No such alteration was observed upon substitution of residues outside the catalytic domain. Analysis of the mutant pss molecules by electrophoresis, mass spectrometry and amino-terminal sequencing showed that the pss protein was retained intact. Our results suggest that the pss protein possesses an amino-terminal secretion signal sequence (residues 1-41) and a carboxyl-terminal signal sequence (residues 76-109). The three-day strike at three BART commuter rail stations killed 79 people and injured more than 1,000 at the time, shattering a 24-year business as usual on the Bay Area's rail network. Yet the devastating April 7, 1989 bombings were hardly a singular event. In the ensuing decades, BART has experienced numerous terrorist attacks, and in each of these incidents the network — both its physical infrastructure and its operations — was

or even days. Far from being an isolated event, many of these attacks were incidents of what BART management called “fatalistic nihilism,” a twisted mindset that provoked terrorists to stake a claim on the very system they were trying to injure. In its simplest terms, “fatalistic nihilism” was the belief that BART could not be harmed because it was so well-designed and so well-engineered. In other words, it was a feeling that the trains, stations, and tracks would protect its passengers
