Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method and apparatus for performing automated tests, and more particularly to test apparatus and method of the type in which at least one head is moved to a first position for sampling the surface of a product, is moved to a second position for marking a particular location on the product, and is moved to a third position for a further inspection of the marked location. 2. Description of the Prior Art Generally, in a mass production of commodity goods, it is not uncommon to perform a test or a preliminary examination for quality control. For example, in a manufacturing process of foodstuffs, the kinds and quality of raw materials are inspected for quality control before starting manufacturing. In many cases, in order to confirm that the raw materials meet required standards, a sample is taken from each lot to be inspected. In some cases, a test of the sample is performed to examine the quality and yield of the product before mass production. However,
