My entry for the contest which was posted on Reddit that the creator of this contest was so much busy that he has not updated the site since the last contest which is in Feb 2016 (I am doubting his seriousness as a person). Last time also he asked for the anime to be live action, to which my entry still stands, so I will still be submitting it. But this time it is an end of the world genre. I tried my best to do a super realistic animation (I actually did manage to figure out how he talked and moved from his left hand to right and vice versa, his left foot extended and the long hair is correct), I wanted him to be transparent and real. The face and the way his hair flow when he moved were thought out for a while and his hair moved like an actual man would move, not a normal jumping animation that everyone does but I want to surprise the viewer by not just having his hair move like a typical jumping animation. The music was actually composed myself as most of the time it is an end of the world genre, so you might notice that the music is quite aggressive. I would like it if some people could have a look and tell me if this is too graphic for a work of fiction, considering I used actual death threats to make the girl go nuts. Music samples are from the soundtrack of the anime Reply 1988, the song is called HOLY DAYZ and the song starts at 1:36:06. As usual, you won't have to wait for long! Until then, enjoy the video and leave some feedback. Let me know if you see something you like. I'm looking forward to getting the beta out to you. Just in case you missed my last video, I'll get to that too. RedLaser, the digital retailer's new online service, will accept digital copies of movies, music, and games as payment. In the image, you can see that a digital purchase shows up as a movie ticket. If you hold your phone vertically or horizontally, the ticket gets turned 90 degrees. You can see where the movie starts, end, and the price, but there's no further information. When you buy the movie, you can watch it

Reducing the number of alleles at a locus in a parentage test designed for one parent in trios. The statistics for the probabilities of parentage of the sampled individuals in a population could be obtained in closed form for a population of infinite size. However, the number of alleles at the locus in a triad (a genetic data set containing a mother, father and their child) is generally less than one. As more loci are used in parentage testing, this situation becomes more and more common. We describe a method for computing the probabilities of parentage in triads, when some, or all, of the alleles at the locus are identical.Bronchial hyperreactivity in patients with hereditary spherocytosis and hereditary hemolytic anemia. The relationship between airway hyperreactivity (AHR) and chronic inflammation remains to be clarified in patients with respiratory diseases. The aim of the present study was to assess whether AHR is associated with chronic inflammation in patients with hereditary spherocytosis (HS) or hemolytic anemia. We evaluated these patients using methacholine challenge tests (MCT), and a battery of inflammatory markers. The number of asthma-like episodes and the amount of glucocorticoid use were also assessed. Twelve patients with HS and 10 with hereditary hemolytic anemia (HHA) were enrolled. SpO?, O? pulse rate (PR) and the frequency of blood transfusion (FT) were significantly lower in patients with HHA. BNP and the levels of serum IL-6 and TNF-? were significantly higher in patients with HHA. The AHR to MCT significantly decreased after the treatment in patients with HHA. AHR to MCT significantly decreased after the treatment in patients with HHA. AHR in patients with HS and HHA was associated with chronic inflammation. Inflammation may be involved in the development of airway hyperreactivity in patients with HS or HHA.Sand cutters have been used in a number of environments, including mining operations and in desert soils. The sand cutters remove material from one side of a rotating drum, and feed the removed material to the opposite side, where the removed material is deposited in a heap. The sand is removed from the drum by the rotating cutting elements of the drum. These cutting elements, which are usually bar-like members, are mounted on a driver bar, which is mounted to
